St. Louis, MO (May 5, 2008). St. Louis-based We Care Worldwide is partnering with a Sacramento-based entrepreneur who operates a number of entrepreneurial businesses (Doing Business With Saints, for example) to launch its Young CEOs Entrepreneur conference on May 17 at the University of Missouri at St. Louis' Millennium Student Center. The St. Louis event begins at 10:00 am and ends at 9:00 pm.

The conference is a FREE community event, designed to provide world-class business development, collaboration, and networking training to existing and aspiring young entrepreneurs and professionals who seek to advance their career to the next level. Additionally the event will facilitate opportunities for small businesses to share and add value to each other. Over 15 workshops and panel discussions are scheduled at each event.

Attendees will hear from nationally known experts in the Black Beauty Supply Industry, and experience one-on-one dialogue with experts on topics such as business start-up strategies, how to take advantage of supplier diversity opportunities, health and wellness, community service, affordable business marketing, how to become an expert communicator, boot camp for website owners, the power of voting, the businesses of the Hip Hop music industry, and much, much more. Hair shows, spa treatments, commercial shoots, and other high-energy activities are woven into the mix.

“Our conferences go beyond networking,” says We Care’s CEO Steve Conley. “We help set the stage for trust by providing an array of invaluable services, information, and opportunities that support business and personal growth. We help develop win-win relationships in a dynamic environment.”

Conley, a long-time proponent of Economic Reciprocity, says he is very proud that Doing Business With Saints has stepped up to the plate by supporting this venture. “Our partner has a number of entrepreneurial endeavors, including affiliation with a national online travel company. There are other travel companies out there that offer various entrepreneurial opportunities,” Conley says. “But how many are supporting our communities by making something like this conference available to our people? Doing Business with Saints and its affiliated companies are unique in the value they are providing us, and our community will be proud to show its appreciation.”

According to Conley, this conference is only the beginning of a nationwide tour scheduled to start fall 2008. The company plans to take its Young CEOs conferences to cities around the country that host Historically Black Colleges and Universities. “We have got to begin training our young people to become community leaders, to develop businesses that circulate dollars within our communities and bring jobs to our people,” Conley says. We can’t continue to bleed dollars away from our tax base, our schools, and places that give our children positive experiences.”
